

Clark Kellogg

Biographical Information

Often recognized as the preeminent voice of college basketball, Clark Kellogg is the lead studio analyst for CBS Sports' coverage of college basketball, including the NCAA Division I Men's Basketball Championship. Kellogg has been a CBS Sports college basketball game and studio analyst for the past two decades. His experience as a former standout player has made him a trusted and entertaining voice in college basketball.

Kellogg is only the second CBS Sports lead college game analyst since Billy Packer joined the network in 1982. Kellogg called his first Final Four and NCAA Division I Men's Basketball Championship in April 2009. He joined CBS full-time in 1997 as a studio/game analyst for the network's college basketball coverage. Kellogg served as a game analyst for CBS Sports' NCAA Tournament coverage in 1993 and 1994 and as studio co-host for first- and second-round coverage from 1994 to 1997. He has also co-hosted The Road to the Final Four since 1997.

From 1990 to 1997, Clark served as an analyst for ESPN's regular-season basketball coverage. He has worked for the Big East Network and Prime Sports. Clark previously served as a television broadcast analyst for the NBA's Indiana Pacers from 1990 to 2014 and served as the team's Vice President of Player Relations from 2010 to 2014.

In addition to Clark's role with CBS Sports, his voice has continuously appeared in the top-selling video game NBA 2K franchise. Over the years, Clark has earned the trust and served as a spokesperson for national brands such as AT&T, Capital One, Coca-Cola, and Enterprise Rent-A-Car. In his free time, Clark volunteers his time and resources to various organizations, including the Fellowship of Christian Athletes, Athletes in Action, United Way, American Red Cross, and the Heart of a Champion Foundation.

Kellogg played for Ohio State University from 1979-82 where he earned All-Big Ten and Most Valuable Player honors. In 1982, Clark was the No. 1 draft pick of the Indiana Pacers and played five seasons before retiring with chronic knee problems. He received a marketing degree from Ohio State in December 1996. A Cleveland, Ohio native, Kellogg now lives in Westerville, Ohio, with his wife, Rosy, and three children. He also serves as a member on The Ohio State University Board of Trustees.
